Bach Fest will be Sunset Center's debut Governor OK's quick coastal commission fix

By PAUL MILLER

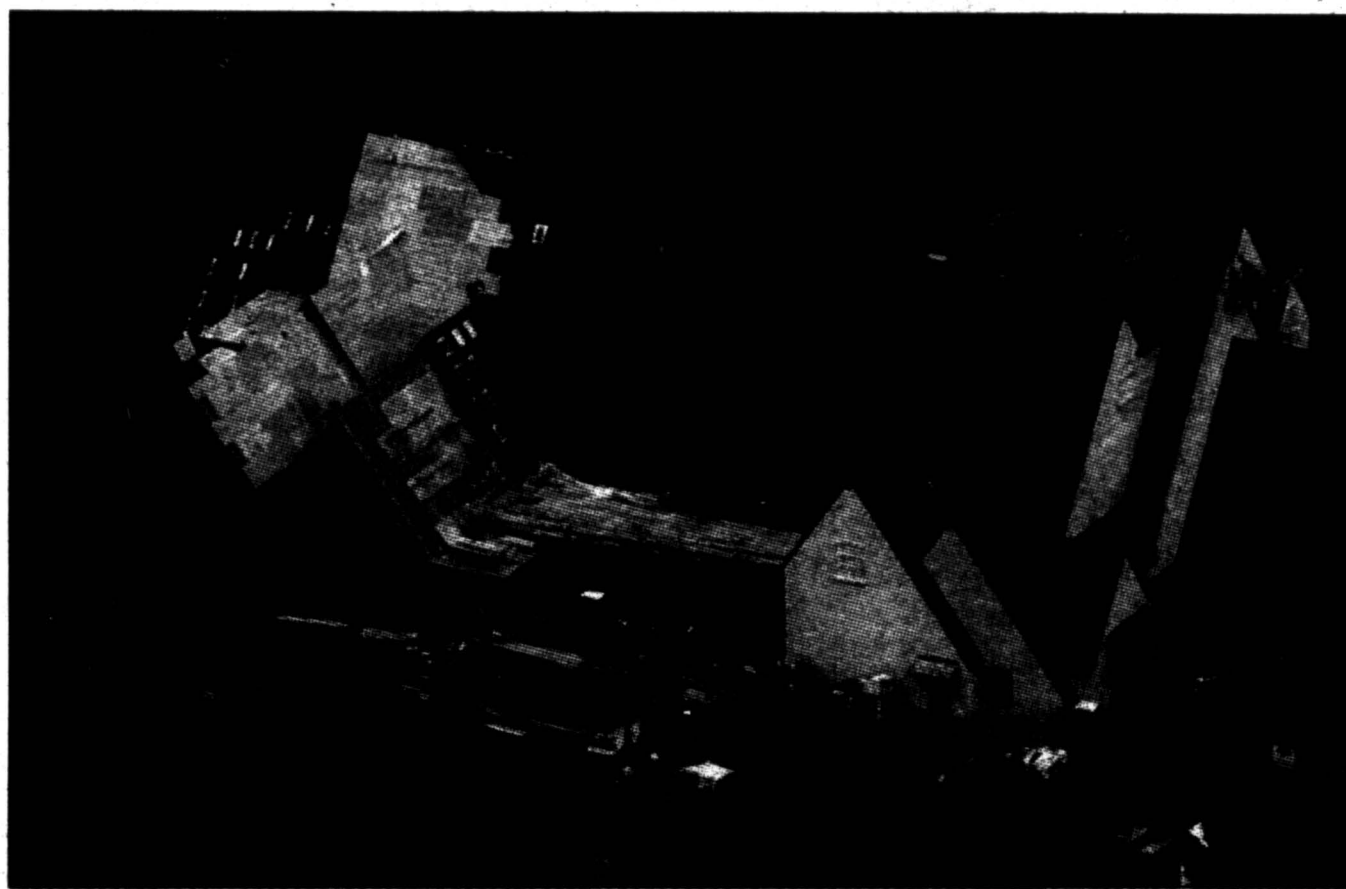

A FREE family concert featuring California's best young musicians will be the very first performance at the new Sunset Center auditorium, officials with the Carmel Bach Festival announced this week.

The family concert, at 4:30 p.m. on July 19, will be followed at 8 p.m. by a gala grand opening performance of J.S. Bach's "Magnificat," with the Bach festival orchestra and a host of outstanding soloists, conducted by Bruno Weil.

"The 'Magnificat' couldn't be a better choice for our return to Sunset," said Bach Fest artistic director Nana Faridany. "It's the most noisy, flashy and celebratory piece Bach wrote."

"After two years on the road, this promises to be our best season and we don't want anyone to miss it," said Willem Wijnbergen, executive director of the festival, which runs from July 19 through Aug. 10.

And while the Bach Fest has finalized its concert schedule and started accepting ticket orders for more than 50 concerts during what they hope will be a sold-out season, the city council decided Wednesday to spend $50,000 to hire a consultant to make sure Sunset Center will be ready for its debut.

The grand new entrance to Sunset Center (left) was still being erected while the stagehouse (right) was well on its way to completion this week. Workers are hurrying to make sure the auditorium is ready for its first concert, the July 19 opening of this year's Bach Festival.

"After construction is finished in May, there will be a lot of moving in to do, logistics, staff training, furniture — just like moving into a house," city administrator Rich Guillen told the council. "Since it is a short time [before the Bach Fest starts] I thought it would be best to get a person to focus on this specific function."

Councilman Dick Ely agreed the consultant was a good idea. "I have been agonizing for months over the commissioning of this building and getting it off and running for this size and investment," he said.

But Barbara Livingston said the city should be able to handle the task on its own. "We have competent, qualified and experienced staff who are up to the task. Hiring a con-

GOVERNOR GRAY Davis announced this week he would support a bill intended to save the California Coastal Commission by setting two-year fixed terms for the eight members of the commission appointed by the state Legislature.

The move ended speculation the governor might ask for broader changes in the structure of the coastal commission to give his office more control over its membership.

After Davis called for a special session of the Legislature, companion bills sponsored by State Sen. Sheila Kuehl, a Democrat from Santa Monica, and Assemblywoman Hannah Beth Jackson, a Democrat from Santa Barbara, were introduced in each house Thursday morning.

The lawmakers hope setting two year terms will answer the 3rd District Court of Appeal's Dec. 30 ruling that the commission violates the state constitution's Separation of Powers clause because it exercises law-enforcement powers but is controlled by the Legislature.

Assemblyman John Laird, who represents the Monterey Peninsula, said the bill speaks directly to the appeals court's concern that the Legislature — responsible for appointing eight of the 12 commissioners — has too much power over the commission because it can fire a majority of the members at any time.

The assemblyman said the new law has enough support in the Assembly to pass. Syrus Devers, a legislative aide in Kuehl's office, was confident the legislation would win easily in the state Senate.

"There is broad support for this," Devers said. "We are even getting support from industry. No one is served by a Sixteen barn owls, tenderly nursed back to health at the SPCA Wildlife Center, found freedom again Thursday when they were released at the Big Sur Land Trust's Glen Deven Ranch south of Carmel. "We have barn owls and the Big Sur Land Trust has barns — it's kind of a match made in heaven," remarked SPCA Executive Director Gary Tiscornia. The release of the owls — several of which came to the wildlife center as orphaned youngsters while the remainder arrived as injured adults — marked the first time the two organizations collaborated on such a venture.

Council members resist ban on private water

By TAMARA GRIPPI

SEVERAL CARMEL City Council members balked at a ban on private water supplies in the city — a ban that was included in the compromise version of the proposed Local Coastal Plan worked out between Mayor Sue McCloud and the staffs of the city and coastal commission.

The ban would make it impossible for private wells to be drilled in the city, or for landowners to come up with any other method to supply their own water in the face of a moratorium on new hookups to the Cal-Am system.

At a special city council meeting Jan. 22, council members Gerard Rose and Dick Ely objected to a section in the latest version of the LCP stating that "private water supplies are prohibited to serve existing and new development."

Coastal Commission District Director Charles Lester, who attended the Jan. 22 meeting, explained that both water policies were written in accordance with the Coastal Act, but promised to consider the council's request to soften the language.

The California Coastal Commission is scheduled to review the first portion of the 800-page document — the Land Use Plan — at its March meeting in San Luis Obispo.

The city submitted its LCP to the commission in December 2001. The two agencies spent the last year negotiating over the substance of the LUP — the portion of the document spelling out policies on everything from development to access to the beach.

The mayor, city administrator Rich Guillen and Carmel's planning staff worked out a compromise with Lester's staff last month. However, the entire city council's first chance to review that compromise didn't come until this week.

Closing the door?

Ely, a former director of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, argued that a ban on private water supply is too restrictive for a community that has long struggled to provide adequate water.

"We want to encourage people all over the Peninsula to solve the water problem irrespective of where you stand on development," Ely said. "The language in here works against what this area spent three decades to work on."

Ely and Rose both maintained it would be unwise to close the door on future technologies that could provide a dependable source of water.

"It may be that private supplies are not a good idea," Rose said. "But to say at this stage, when we don't know the technology coming down the pike, that you can't put a well on your own property, isn't appropriate."

Ely predicted that in the future, the water district may lift some of the restrictions on "gray water," or reused water, which could be beneficial to homeowners.

The Coastal Act's aversion to private water supplies is based on the concern that over time, such systems could undermine the publicly managed water supply, Lester said.

He presented the council with this example: "Let's say you did have a lot that no longer has any water and the owners want to drill a well. Aside from all the other issues,

April elections draw scrutiny of grand jury

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL'S LONG-STANDING practice of holding stand-alone municipal elections has survived the scrutiny of the 2002 Monterey County Civil Grand Jury.

The grand jury report, released earlier this month, pointed out that in 2002 more people voted in the city's April election than in the March gubernatorial primary — numbers which justify holding city elections on their own, the grand jury concluded. Sixty percent of registered voters participated in the city's April 2002 special election, when Sue McCloud was reelected over Barbara Livingston. Only 47 percent came out for that year's statewide primary.

However, the November 2002 gubernatorial race drew even more city voters — 65 percent — and the November 2000 presidential race brought out more than 80 percent.

Carmel is the only city in Monterey County that hasn't consolidated its election with the general election.

Daniel Reith, the foreman of the grand jury, said his group kept a close watch on Carmel's 2002 election. "It had been sort of a sore point in government when a special election is held for each entity," Reith said. Special elections cost more and "tend to result in a lower turnout, but that didn't particularly prove to be the case in Carmel."

The grand jury also concluded the cost to hold an election for just the city council and mayor was minimal — 50 cents more per registered voter. Carmel's contentious mayor and city council race last April drew more voters than the statewide primary the month before. The grand jury even suggested Carmel could lure more voters to vote in the statewide election if the city moves its election to coincide with the primary.

Carmel's stand-alone election has received its share of attention in recent years. Soon after the 2000 election, the Carmel City Council decided to move the city's election from April to November to encourage more voter participation and to help avoid the confusion of a campaign interfering with the city's budget process.

But a few months later a majority of the council members had changed their minds and decided to leave the April election alone.

The grand jury, which examined election practices and participation throughout the county, was satisfied that Carmel's stand-alone election was justified.

"We wanted to look at it because it has been a concern in other parts of the state," Reith said.

Coastal Commission saves $12,000 for each meeting it cancels

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CALIFORNIA Coastal Commission, facing a combined $1.5 million worth of cuts for the next two years, agreed to trim its meeting schedule each month from four days to three — saving $12,000 for each scrapped day of hearings.

At the commission's Jan. 8 meeting in Los Angeles, executive director Peter Douglas explained that the shortened meeting schedule — which would result in a total savings of $144,000 a year — is just one of several measures the state board is taking to economize.

Each month, the commission holds its week of meetings at a different coastal locale, from Eureka to San Diego.

The commission is also cutting down on staff travel, phone calls and postage costs, and has instituted a hiring freeze in order to brace for the damage to its $16 million annual budget, Douglas said.

Several of the commissioners who attended the Jan. 8 meeting questioned whether condensing the meeting schedule was a good idea.

Commissioner Christine Desser noted that the board's ability to concentrate diminishes as the meetings stretch longer into the night while they deal with everything from nuclear power plant operations to what homeowners along the coast are allowed to plant in their yards.

"I hope we can anticipate days we're not going to have 10 or 11 p.m. or midnight meetings," Desser said. "I don't feel we're doing our best work when we put in a 12-hour day."

Commissioner Gregg Hart suggested the board change its priorities by putting the applicants ahead of the commission's regular reports and presentations.

"We have members of the public who have permits to be processed," Hart said, noting "that's the real reason for being here."

The debate came as the commission was also facing a challenge to its basic authority in a lawsuit brought by an environmental group in Orange County. Last month, an appeals court ruled that the coastal commission, which is controlled by the Legislature, exceeds its authority by adopting regulations for coastal development, issuing or denying permits, and punishing Coastal Act violators.

Just as the coastal commission was considering how to deal with that problem, its 2002/2003 budget was cut by more than $500,000. Governor Gray Davis' proposed budget for next year calls for another $1 million to be slashed.

State money accounts for approximately two-thirds of the commission's budget. In addition, the commission receives $1.1 million from sales of a special license plate; $2.9 million from federal taxpayers via the Department of the Interior and $1.1 million in reimbursements from other state agencies.

Fee hikes?

But all the money collected from applicants for coastal development permits, and finer paid by landowners caught violating the Coastal Act, doesn't go to the commission.

After hearing a report on various enforcement proceedings — which can produce substantial fines and penalties — commissioners wanted to know why they don't get money from the violators.

Woman gets five years in state prison for elder financial abuse

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE SEASIDE resident who stole thousands of dollars from two elderly in-home care clients will serve several years in state prison and could spend the rest of her life working to pay back the more than $45,000 she still owes her victims, according to deputy district attorney Joe Buckalew.

Maria Joy Riemedio, 52, pleaded guilty to five counts of felony financial elder abuse, two counts of forgery and one count of fraudulent use of a credit card before she was sentenced Jan. 17.

Following several months of investigation by Carmel Police Detective Sgt. Terry Chandler, Seaside police arrested Riemedio at her Lowell Street home last September for stealing $4,500 from Carmel resident Willfriede Johnson. While working as Johnson's caregiver in January and February last year, Riemedio used her client's ATM card on several occasions to withdraw $3,500 and then cashed a forged $1,000 check on Feb. 19 — two days after Johnson died. A trustee noticed the suspicious transactions and contacted Carmel police.

During his research on the case, Chandler also learned Riemedio took a job working for Park Lane resident Frances Teresa in May and subsequently accompanied the elderly woman to the bank on 12 separate occasions, withdrawing $1,000 each time.

Such crimes were not new to Riemedio, according to Buckalew. Part of her Jan. 17 sentencing related to a case that began in 1998. While working as treasurer for the Marina Youth Football Association, Riemedio embezzled $16,000.

After admitting to the crime, she stole money from clients who employed her as an in-home care provider and used those funds to repay the football league, according to Buckalew. All told, she took more than $30,000.

In addition to the five years and four months Riemedio is serving in state prison as a result of her guilty pleas, she must also make restitution. Buckalew said she still owes most of what she stole in the Marina case, as well as $16,500 more in the Carmel and Monterey cases.

Riemedio's repeat offenses — made possible by the fact that she lied on her employment applications about her prior conviction — should send a message to people who hire caregivers for the elderly, Buckalew said.

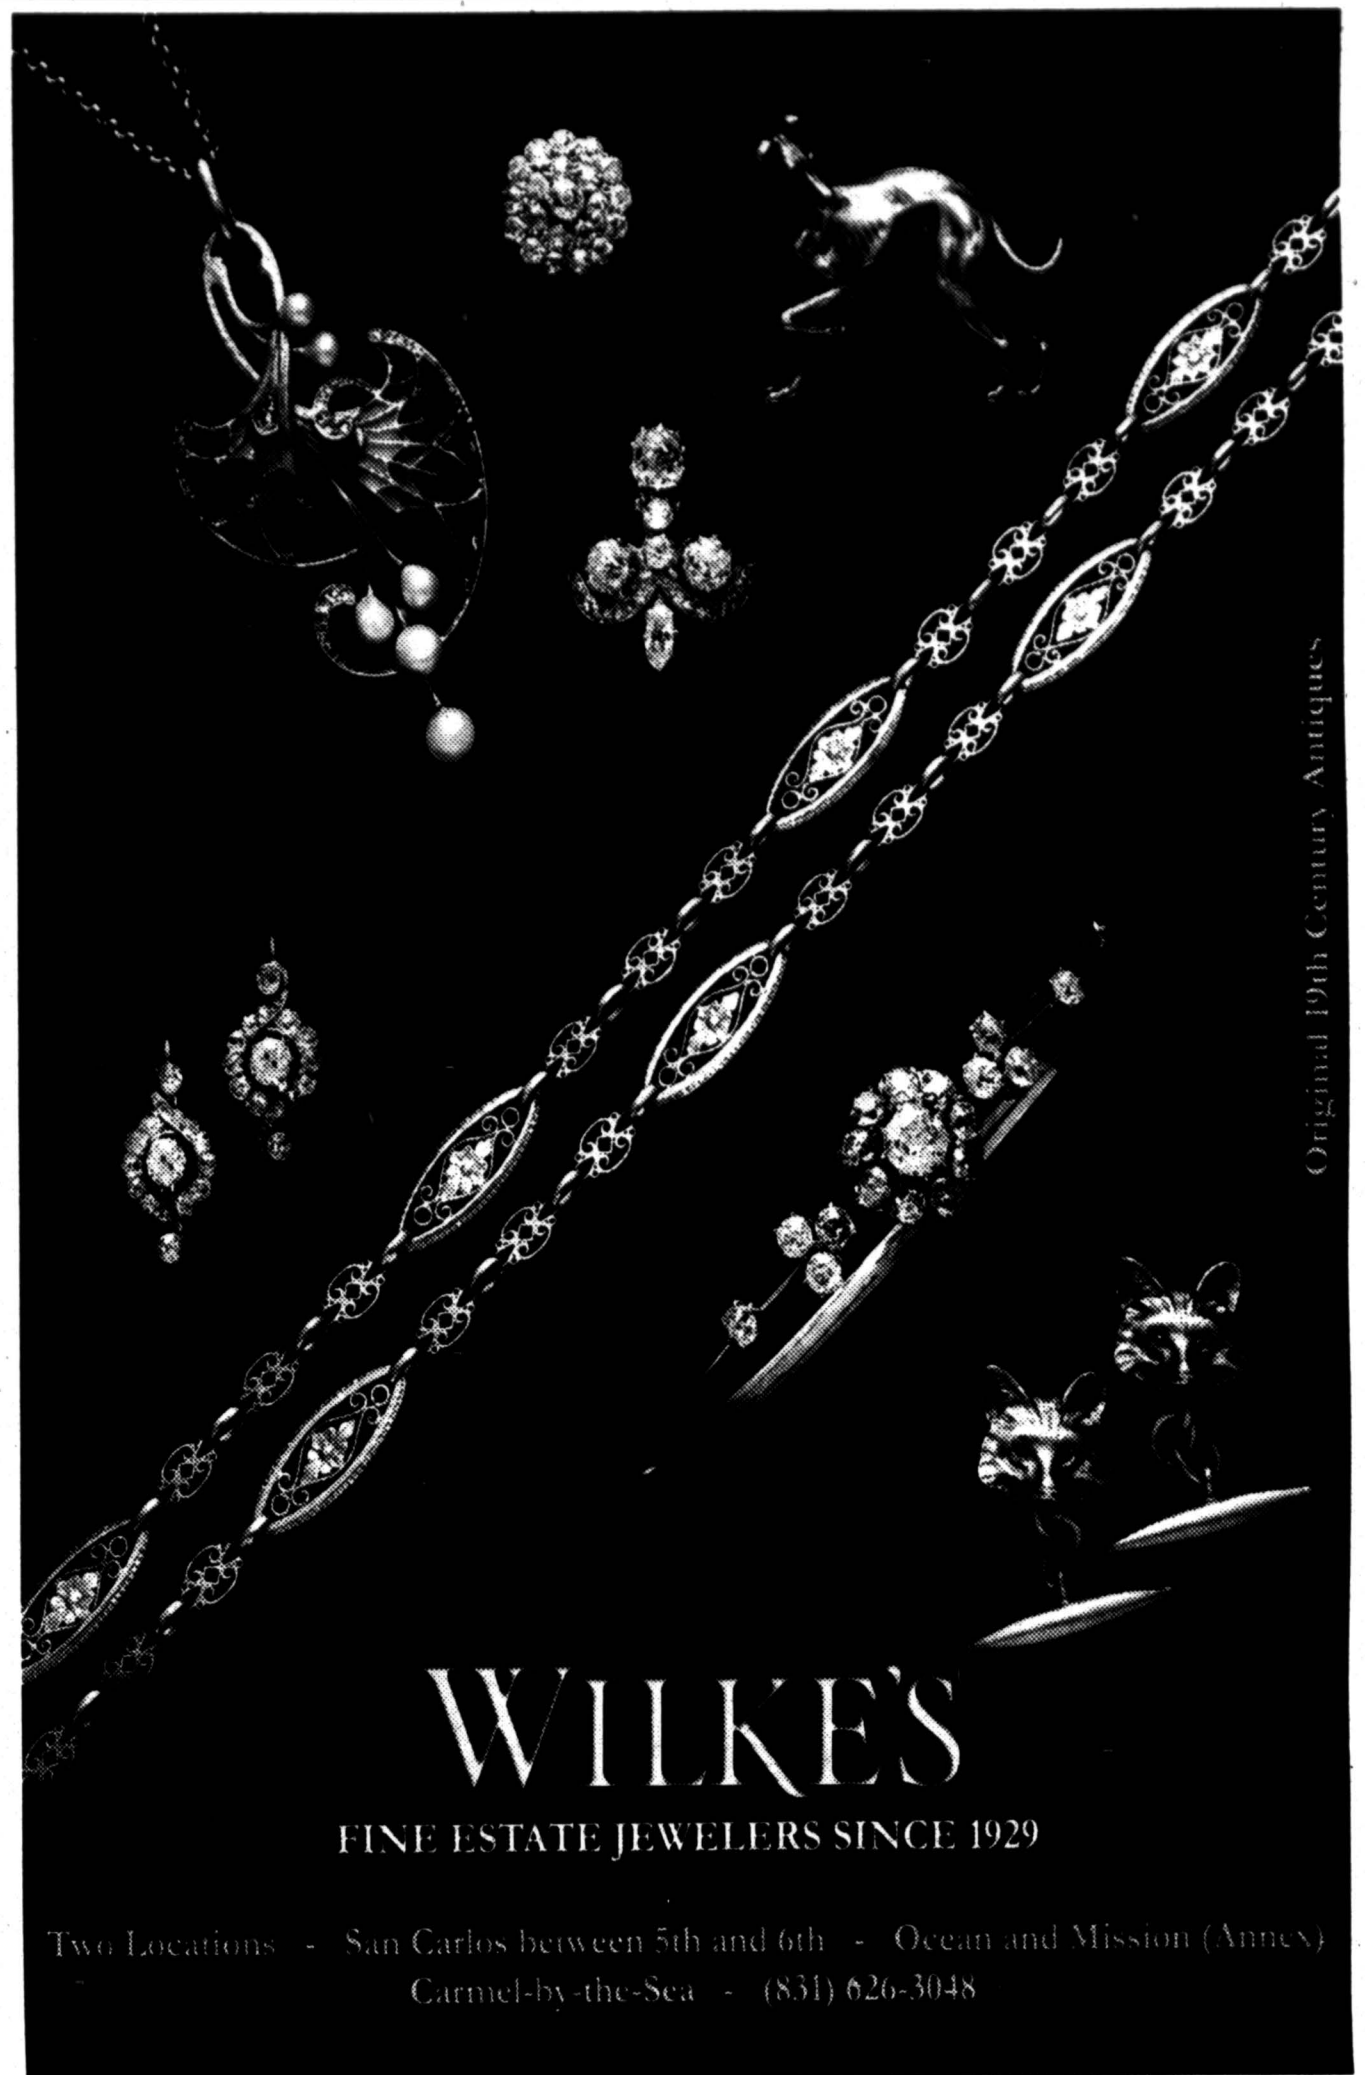

"I just hope we get the word out to the community that this is an ongoing criminal problem and these cases are occurring all the time," he said.

Lawsuit blames city for Carmel Rancho trip-and-fall

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A WOMAN who tripped and fell on an uneven sidewalk is suing the City of Carmel for medical costs, lost wages and $25,000 in damages, even though the sidewalk in question is far outside the city limits.

According to a complaint filed in Monterey County Superior Court last month, Salinas resident Socorro Alonzo was walking on a Carmel Rancho Boulevard sidewalk Aug. 19, 2002, when she fell. Located at the mouth of Carmel Valley, Carmel Rancho Boulevard lies within the unincorporated area of Monterey County.

Attorney Tab Mitchell of Hollister would not comment on the case, and Alonzo's lawsuit against Carmel and the County of Monterey contains no description of her injuries.

The complaint accuses the city and county of general negligence and premises liability, and seeks compensation for wage loss, hospital and medical expenses, general damage and loss of earning capacity.

The city already responded to a claim filed by Mitchell on behalf of Alonzo last October.

According to that claim, Alonzo was walking along Carmel Rancho around 7:30 a.m. "when she suddenly tripped and fell on uneven pavement in the sidewalk, causing a fracture to her left shoulder.

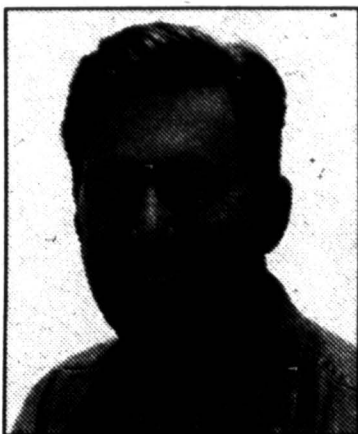

"Claimant's injuries and damages were the result of the negligence of the City of Carmel and its respective agents, servants and/or employees in the negligent maintenance of and upkeep of city sidewalks," according to that claim.

In an Oct. 23, 2002, letter to Mitchell, assistant city administrator Greg D'Ambrosio advised the attorney to look at a map. "Ms. Alonzo was clearly outside the city limits of our community by well over one-half mile," he wrote.

Now that the city appears as a defendant on a lawsuit pertaining to the accident, Freeman said, the court may end up settling the jurisdictional question.

"I would advise them again that it did not occur in the city and ask them to dismiss the city as a defendant," he said. "If they didn't dismiss it, then we would file a motion for summary judgment and also go after them for the costs."

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OFF TO AN AMBITIOUS START

By TAMARA GRIPPI

ORGANIZERS OF Carmel's centennial celebration unveiled a year's worth of events saluting "100 Years in Paradise" at a festive kick-off party at La Playa Jan. 23.

At the sold-out event, Carmelites learned about the ambitious schedule of events for the rest of the year, including an exhibit of historical photographs which will run for several months at the Marjorie Evans Gallery at Sunset Center.

All city events this year will have a special, historical twist.

Master of ceremonies Alan Brenner, decked out in the garb of Carmel founder and developer Frank Devendorf, explained why 1903 marked the true beginning of Carmel, although the city wasn't incorporated until 1916.

In 1903 "The Pine Inn was rolled down Ocean Avenue to its present location, pine trees were planted down the middle of Ocean, lots started to be sold for $5 down and $5 a month and the Carmel Development Company began to advertise the new town," Brenner said.

That year, Devendorf and Frank Powers began building in Carmel.

At the kick-off party, organizers showed off a brochure capturing the highlights and intriguing tidbits of Carmel's rich history. At least 20,000 copies of the brochure will be available at city hall, First Murphy House, Harrison Memorial Library and the Carmel Business Association.

William F. Stone's commemorative watercolor, capturing some of the city's most beloved historical buildings, was on display.

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud introduced the honorary co-chairs of the centennial, Glenn and Marian Leidig. Other members include chairman Buzz Hoever, Pat Sippel, Nicki McMahan, Sarah Berling, Erik Bethel, Lou Ungaretti, Mia McKee, Kay Prine and Erling Lagerholm.

Fight over goat cheese lands in federal court

By MARY BROWNFIELD

TWO FORMER Carmel Valley goat farmers allege the county illegally put them out of business, while the county maintains their commercial goat dairy had always been outside the law and that shutting it down was perfectly legal.

The battle between the two — already waged in county offices, Superior Court and state appellate and Supreme Court — is set to continue in U.S. District Court in San Jose on Valentine's Day.

Ana and Gilbert Cox sued the county in federal court last September for the illegal taking of their land without just compensation; the county wants the case dismissed.

The fight over the dairy began almost 10 years ago, when the county responded to two neighbor complaints and cited the Coxes for running the dairy. The farmers contend they had all the permits they needed and the county kept changing the rules — resulting in the eventual shutdown of their business and therefore the unlawful taking of their land.

When the Coxes began raising, breeding and selling goats on their 11.54-acre Cachagua property in 1978, agricultural zoning allowed a dairy to be built on parcels that were 10 acres or more. They built a dairy to make their goat milk commercially available in 1987 and started selling 600 pounds of goat cheese a week in 1994, when they named their business Carmel Valley Chevre.

With a California Department of Food and Agriculture license and an agriculture exemption from the county, the Coxes were never advised they needed anything else, according to the lawsuit filed by Clovis attorney Brian Leighton.

It turned out the operation required a use permit — a fact the Coxes said they didn't learn until two neighbors complained and the county cited them in 1994. By that time, the zoning in the area had changed to a 40-acre minimum for a dairy. They sought a use permit and variance but were denied by the planning commission and board of supervisors in 1996.

The Coxes took the matter to Monterey County Superior Court in 1997 and lost, and were subsequently sued by the county for running the dairy despite a cease-and-desist order. That case went to trial in April 1999.

"What the county asked for and the judge gave them was: You can have as many goats as you want, milk as many as you want and make as much cheese as you want, but you can't commercially sell it," Leighton said.

The Coxes fought that decision in the California Court of Appeals, which ruled their dairy was illegal and always had been since it never had a use permit. They requested the California Supreme Court review that decision and were denied.

'Police powers'

In his claim for inverse condemnation/takings, Leighton accused the county of using "police powers to regulate plaintiffs' rights to make a profit from the conduct, not the conduct itself."

County and state codes encourage agriculture operations, including dairies, and protect them regardless of zoning changes so long as they have been operating for more than three years, according to Leighton. The county denied the Coxes "all economically beneficial use of the land" because it changed the law after they built their dairy.

"It's heartbreaking for us, because everything we have worked for all these years was in that property in Cachagua," Ana Cox said, adding that they ultimately had to sell it to pay legal costs. Gilbert Cox and the goats have already moved to Northern California and the couple plans to open a new dairy.

According to San Francisco attorney Osa Armi, the case should be dismissed because the Coxes never raised the taking issue in state court and because they missed a one-year deadline for filing their federal appeal.

"Even assuming plaintiffs were somehow able to overcome these fundamental jurisdictional barriers, the substance of their takings claim is utterly without merit," Armi wrote.

U.S. District Court Judge Ronald Whyte is scheduled to hear the county's request for dismissal Feb. 14 at 9 a.m. in San Jose.

dysfunctional coastal commission."

Davis announced his support for the legislative fix Wednesday. "The Legislature and I have worked with extraordinary cooperation and unprecedented speed to keep the California Coastal Commission viable and doing its job," Davis announced in a written statement.

After the appeals court ruling was handed down, there was much speculation about whether Davis would ask for

April 1 ticket deadline

Last week, ticket brochures were mailed to 13,000 fans of the Bach Festival around the country. The brochure — along with a complete order form — is also included in this week's Pine Cone. The deadline for placing ticket orders is April 1, but festival officials said people who want to witness one of the city's biggest-ever cultural events shouldn't wait to get in their orders.

"We're expecting a big response," said Kathleen Bonner, the festival's ticket manager. She said seats for 20 concerts at Sunset Center would be assigned beginning in late February. Tickets for those concerts — and for concerts at the Carmel Mission, All Saints Church, the Church in the Forest and other venues — will be mailed in June.

In 2000, Sunset Center closed for a complete renovation. The theater, which served as a school auditorium until the 1960s, had terrible acoustics and dreadful backstage facilities.

But the new center — a $22 million project backed with private donations and a big contribution from Carmel taxpayers — will be replete with modern amenities and promises to be the city's showplace for decades. It will also serve as a regional center for the performing arts for the entire Monterey Peninsula, Mayor Sue McCloud said.

"It's something this town of just 4,000 people can be very proud of."

more far-reaching changes to the coastal commission.

However, the governor appears to be satisfied with retaining his "at-will" power over his four appointments while allowing the Legislature to appoint the majority of coastal commissioners for two-year terms.

"In the days after the court decision there were lots of questions about which way to go and there were suggestions that the governor should have the majority of appointments," Laird said. "The general consensus that emerged, which I supported all along, was that we should tweak the commission only to the extent the court said it was unconstitutional."

The legislators said they opted against setting fixed two-year terms for the governor's appointments because they didn't think the court's ruling called for such a change.

"The essence of the lawsuit is that the legislative branch is exercising the authority of the executive branch," said Devers. "The governor is perfectly privileged to exercise that authority."

Devers said the possibility of a rival bill aimed at weakening the commission emerging on the floor of either house is remote.

WATER

there is a concern that if the well fails and is not publicly managed that they'll come back to a public water system already under stress."

Rose suggested the language could be tweaked to say "private water supplies could be prohibited unless established consistent with the Coastal Act."

Ely pointed out that the "stringent policies" of the State Water Resources Control Board already in place should be adequate to protect against misuse.

Lester said he would like to spend some more time thinking about the issue and listen to what the coastal commission has to say about private water supplies when it takes up that issue next month.

After hearing concerns from council member Paula Hazdovac that the LCP didn't give residential uses priority for new public water supply, Lester also made no promises. The provision for setting aside water for "commercial recreation" and "visitor serving uses" comes directly from the Coastal Act, he said.

That policy wouldn't prevent the city from giving out water for residential development, he said.

For example, Cambria is required to set aside 20 percent of its water for visitor serving uses, but has the ability to allocate the remaining 80 percent elsewhere, according to Lester.

Any rival legislation would have to first go before the natural resource committees in each house, chaired by Jackson in the Assembly and Kuehl in the Senate.

While the Assembly could hold a hearing on the legislation as early as Jan. 30, the state Senate — which must abide by a third reading requirement — won't be able to open its discussion until Feb. 3, Devers said.

While the legislation moves forward in Sacramento, the State Attorney General's office is waiting to hear if the appeals court will grant its request for a rehearing.

If that request is rejected, Attorney General Bill Lockyer will ask the state Supreme Court to issue a stay. The appeal's court ruling is scheduled to go into effect Jan. 29.

COASTAL

Faust explained that fines collected by the commission go to the Coastal Conservancy, which acquires land for preservation as open space.

"This issue was something legislative analysts brought up many years ago," said Douglas. Ultimately the Legislature decided against allowing the commission to receive reimbursements of its enforcement costs.

"They didn't want to create a bounty-hunter mentality," Douglas said. "They didn't want to create that kind of conflict for the commission and their staff."

The commission decided to again take up the issue of its fees and cost-recovery options at its upcoming meeting in February.

HIGHER COSTS OF RENTING

Let's supposed you are earning the minimum wage and putting in a standard 40-hour workweek. Where in this nation could you find a one-bedroom apartment that is affordable at your income level?

According to the National Low Income Housing Coalition, the answer is...nowhere.

To pay the rent on a typical two-bedroom apartment in our nation—just the rent, with nothing left over for food and other needs—you have to earn about $12 to $15 an hour. Higher, to say the least, in San Francisco and most of the rest of California.

It is not surprising, therefore, that they're having a terrible time finding workers for elementary municipal services, clerks for local convenience shops, and teachers in expensive housing markets. And the problem is getting worse, for the most part, not better.

The seasoned real estate investor sees opportunity in this spreading problem, though. We need affordable housing, we need thousands of rental units, we need to keep the foundation of every real estate market—the first-time buyer—alive and well. And those who find ways to do so will reap great rewards. Questions? Call John Levinson at 659-8002.

THE FAILED Experiment — Part I: "The Call."

Admittedly, last October's decision to cut TV out of my life was intended to be a permanent lifestyle change. But due to withdrawal symptoms that refused to go away — neurosis untreatable by my shrink as I couldn't blame it on my parents — the experience turned into a painful "failed experiment." By the time I flew back from vacation, I was already making plans of what I'd watch.

But things started going downhill with the very first step — trying to get an appointment with the cable company.

"What is your address?" asked the faceless voice on the phone.

I gave her my Carmel street address, a perfectly Carmel-typical geographic location.

"Yes, now give me your address."

I repeated my address.

"I'm sorry," the voice said, clearly lying, "but I need the proper address."

"It is the street address."

"I can't use that," said the obstinate voice. "You should have a better address. The house should have a number."

As I felt my blood pressure rising, I expected her to suggest next that I take remedial reading classes to learn to read the number on my own house.

"I'm telling you, we have no numbers on houses in Carmel," I replied, gritting my teeth.

"Well, you'll just have to get a number before we can send anyone to connect the cable."

"Look, just pass me to your supervisor," I demanded, biting my tongue against the four-letter words I desperately wanted to use.

"Fine, hold to be connected," I was told. Then she hung up on me.

As I redialed the number, I mentally calculated the cost of treating a cardiac arrest, hospital stay and all, and compared it to the real estate value of my numberless Carmel house.

"How can we help you?" the new voice asked.

"Please pass me to your supervisor."

"I think you need technical support; this is the sales department," the voice informed me.

"Yes, I KNOW. I don't have an account yet; but I WANT A SUPERVISOR!"

To her credit, she didn't hang up on me.

Stay tuned for next week's Part II: "The Appointment"

This room is surrounded by windows and looks out onto Ocean Avenue — a perfect setting for a poetry reading in this village first populated by poets and artists.

O P I N I O N

Editorial*Cell phone antennas are not a nuisance

NEXT WEEK the Monterey County Board of Supervisors will consider an application for three new cell phone antennas along Highway 1 south of Carmel — an area that is presently devoid of cellular service.

The county's planning staff is recommending that the board not allow the antennas, citing their "visual incompatibility" with the scenery of Carmel Highlands.

In this case, the staff is mistaken. The antennas should be approved.

Back in the old days (ten years ago), before cell phones became a ubiquitous convenience, they were regarded with the skepticism that greets anything new. Telephone poles line practically every road — even Highway 1 through Big Sur — without eliciting the slightest protest from the public which long ago got used to them and is well aware they are necessary. The power, telephone and cable TV lines strung everywhere truly are a blight, but nobody uses the public comment period and the supervisors' meetings to call for a big tax increase to fund a massive undergrounding program.

Cell phone antennas, on the other hand, have been scrutinized way beyond their nuisance level which, by comparison to other utility services, is practically nil — especially considering how few of them there are (or ever will be).

Several years ago, for example, a story pole (complete with orange netting) went up to show the visual impact of a proposed cell phone antenna — not on a scenic bluff overlooking the Pacific, but at an abandoned gas station on a run-down corner in Castroville. The antenna itself, once it was installed, was hardly noticeable.

And then, of course, there are the famous fake-tree antennas on a hilltop overlooking Highway 101 in north county. The intentions behind the fake trees was laudable, but the trees aren't. They are much uglier, and much more noticeable, than plain old antennas would be.

Now, AT&T Wireless wants to attach nine-foot extensions to three existing 20-foot telephone poles along Highway 1 — one at Ribera Road, another 1.2 miles south of Ribera Road, and a third at Yankee Point Drive. The county zoning administrator OK'd the antennas, but a resident appealed, contending that "no attempts were made to hide the cell sites in a highly visible area."

Obviously, the antennas should be hidden as much as possible. But more important is that they provide coverage over as wide an area as possible, especially along such a busy highway where a cell phone can be a great comfort — especially for a woman or a senior citizen traveling alone, or for any motorist in distress.

The board should recognize the importance of cell phone service for public safety as well as the wonderful convenience it offers in everyday life. History is replete with examples of inventions that moved quickly from being objects of curiosity to can't-live-without-it necessities. The cell phone is one of these. Dead zones have become a major annoyance.

If you agree that cell phone service is needed through Carmel Highlands and Big Sur, please let your county supervisor know.

Protect the schools

Dear Editor,

Why should Carmel and other wealthy school districts be penalized by Gov. Gray Davis' budget proposal while the California Correctional Peace Officers, who contributed more than $3 million to the governor's political campaign, are spared?

Gov. Davis proposes big budget cuts from Carmel and other "wealthy" school districts but takes next to nothing from the Department of Corrections. It makes no sense to take money from our developmental population only to have to spend it later for incarceration and difficult rehabilitation.

Carmel must fight unequal treatment to make sure the high caliber of education in the schools continues. Schools are the most important institution in a community, so state money should not come at the expense of local school districts. You can tell your state legislators to make big fund cuts elsewhere. They are: State Senator Bruce McPherson (phone 831-443-3402, e-mail senator.mcpherson@sen.ca.gov) and Assemblyman John Laird (phone 831-384-2913, e-mail: Assemblyman.Laird@assembly.ca.gov).

Gullible valley residents?

Dear Editor,

I was pleased to see Valley Watch admit that its "survey" was not scientific (Joan Bizzozero and Robert Sinotte's Jan. 17 Letter to the Editor). It's too bad Bizzozero and Sinotte didn't read their own words, as they then proceeded to reiterate the same nonsense that they had just admitted was unreliable. That should tell us all something about the trustworthiness of Valley Watch.

Also, what cities are they referring to that are encouraging development? Carmel and Monterey encourage tourism, but development, I think not. Why do they continue to use "No Carmel Valley City" when the proposal is for the Town of Carmel Valley? Do they really think Valley residents are that gullible? The exploration of incorporation was begun by Valley residents fed up with big developers and their high priced lawyers always getting their way with the County Supervisors. I suggest that their "vast majority of surveyed participants [that] don't want their community in partnership with the tourism/hospitality industry," should avail themselves of accurate information regarding proposed and approved development in the Valley. Valley projects are frequently opposed by Valley residents only to be eventually pushed through by developers and their lawyers. We have to ask ourselves, what happens to the Valley residents' concerns regarding increasing traffic, lack of water, the rural nature of our town? Are the County Supervisors listening to our concerns? If we were the Town of Carmel Valley, residents would be able to not only be heard but listened to! Should residents be able to use their land? Of course. Do we need developers with their subdivisions in our town? No. Stand up against misinformation, sign the petition to get the accurate information, and be heard.

Don't forget other
needy animals

Dear Editor,

Now that the Teddy Bear dog is happily living in his new home, I want to mention some other people who helped him and in so doing gave me the Christmas present of a lifetime!

One couple came very close to adopting Teddy, but instead gave a very generous donation to the SPCA. They not only paid for his long-term care there but also for many other unlucky animals who have lost the love and protection of a family.

As hard as it was for Teddy, imagine the fate of those animals who are equally deserving but haven't gotten the benefit of his 15 minutes of fame.

I spent futile hours talking to people about "the big black dog," put a "free to good home" ad out, and even had a letter published about him and the need for more awareness of neutering programs. All this brought no results.

But, then, people were so moved by the poignant article in The Carmel Pine Cone which focused on his sad plight — and that was what brought forth such heartfelt interest.

So thank you, Pine Cone people, for being Teddy Bear's literary guardian angels.

Julia M. Harvey, Carmel Valley

CAR FLIPS AFTER COLLISION ON FOURTH AVENUE

A black Jeep Cherokee driven by a Carmel man flipped and landed on its roof Thursday afternoon after colliding with an Infiniti driven by Diane Zealear at the intersection of Fourth Avenue and Mission Street in Carmel. According to Carmel Bistro owner Ryan Kelly, who witnessed the accident, Jeep driver Robert Franklin was heading down Fourth when Zealear began to pull out from the stop sign at Mission Street, driving south. Nobody appeared to be seriously hurt in the accident, which left the driver of the Jeep upside down in his vehicle. Bill Hogan, owner of a nearby golf travel business, helped the driver out through the broken side window. "He had some cuts on his hand and his ankle and a bump on his head, but he said he was OK," Hogan said. Franklin was taken to CHOMP by ambulance for evaluation. The Carmel Police Department is investigating the accident.

HIGHWAY 1 TO CARMEL VALLEY RD. RIGHT ON CARMEL RANCHO LANE IN CARMEL

STOUT & PORTER Canhan-Nelson, a dynamic duo of dachshunds, love to intercept Frisbees tossed by Dad Chris. When spied on the walking path on Scenic early Thursday morning, both Stout and Porter had sand on their noses from their beach sortie just prior to our encounter. Carmel Beach, above 10th, now has enough returned sand to allow outings on other than bedrock.

It's Stout, 3, who is Keeper of the Frisbee, as Porter, 6, feels his young brother should not be a stranger to responsibility. It's Stout, too, who likes to play, play, play all day, while older brother Porter snoozes. They both get more than enough exercise at the beach three or four times a week and in Garland Park where, Dad claims, "they grew up hiking" — which conjures up a mental picture of the boys with little knapsacks and Bavarian hats hiking and humming "Val-de-Ri, Val-de-Ra . . ."

As well as Dad Chris and Mom Meredith, the boys have lots of company at home: They have three bird siblings: Peabody and Sherman, green conures, and Bandit, a blue love bird with black mask.

They also have three "wiener friends," according to Dad: Rosco is Porter's half brother, Fidel, is unrelated, and Daphne, who lives with the boys' maternal grandmother. They all rendezvous at the beach or at Asilomar, and sometimes are baby-sat at Mom and Dad's house in Carmel Valley. When all five get together, it must resemble the dachshund stampede in that Sprint PCS commercial.

RESIDENTS MAKING RIGHT-OF-WAY THEIR OWN

■ Confusion at council meeting

By TAMARA GRIPPI

FACED WITH an increase in requests from residents wanting to put rocks, pebbles or decomposed granite in the public right of way in front of their homes, the Carmel City Council attempted to hold the line on such "encroachments" — denying the second request to come before it in two months.

Voting 3-2, with council members Paula Hazdovac and Gerard Rose dissenting, the majority of council members agreed it's time to put a stop to homeowners taking city property.

However, several people who attended the meeting pointed out that the city isn't necessarily giving the same answer to everyone who asks for permission to improve the strip of city-owned land in front of their homes.

The council ruled Jan. 7 that Paul and Jeanet Sivas would have to remove the river rocks and gravel they had installed along the front of their property. And last month San Antonio homeowners David and Julie Jones were also told to remove the decomposed granite they had installed.

However, several months earlier, the council granted an encroachment to another San Antonio Avenue homeowner who convinced the council such a step was necessary to reduce flooding.

At the Jan. 7 meeting, Jeanet Sivas told the council the rocks and pebbles help to keep the street clean. "We didn't know we were doing anything wrong," Sivas said. "It looks to us that it fits in with the rest of the neighbors. They're all using large river rocks for the same purpose."

Currently city code states that the right of way between the edge of the street pavement and private property should be reserved for landscaping and should remain in a natural state, according to Carmel Building Official Tim Meroney.

Carmel homeowner Doug Weaver told the council he felt

"singled out" when he was recently told "anything not living is not legal on city property."

Weaver said he thinks the enforcement of the city code is selective, dependent on complaints.

"The law should be the law for everyone," said Linda Anderson, who called for more code enforcement.

But Hazdovac argued there are so many encroachments that have been "grandfathered in" — approved before the law changed — enforcement has become really difficult.

"It's a little ridiculous to ask staff to comb the street looking for problems they can't do anything about in most cases," Hazdovac said, adding that she didn't see anything wrong with the Sivas' handiwork.

But councilwoman Barbara Livingston disagreed. "We have to do what's right for the city," she said. "We have to support our codes and the general plan."

Carmel City Attorney Don Freeman noted that the city often hears similar complaints from business owners who want to know why they can't put up the same type of signs their neighbors use.

"The reality is we've changed the code," Freeman said. "We get that type of question all the time."

Rose said the Sivas shouldn't be punished for fixing up their property in a way that's consistent with the neighborhood. "It's time to end the madness and grant the appeal," he said.

But Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud argued that the city needs to stand by its code.

"I feel very torn on this, but I do think we've got to reverse the trend," said McCloud. "It's just proliferating."

Home's livability prompts praise from peers

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A BRITISH knight's turn-of-the-century country homes inspired Carmel architect Richard Barrett's design that earned him the coveted Honor Award in the American Institute of Architects Monterey Bay Chapter 2002 design competition.

The award "is given to a project that has special distinction worthy of particular notice and hope for emulation by other architects," chapter president Phil Korcheck told The Pine Cone.

"English architect Sir Edwin Lutyens did these large country houses that were known for their warmth as well as their presence," Barrett said of the man whose designs inspired the 2,800-square-foot home he created for Robert and Leslie Huntley.

Built of wood rather than the brick and masonry that would have been used in the U.K., the Huntleys' home features a multitude of traditional features, including leaded windows and a steeply pitched roof that dips within six feet of the ground.

Fitting everything the client wanted under a steep roof was a challenge, especially since the county planning department mistakenly told Barrett there was a 20-foot-height limit on the property off Robinson Canyon Road. But the architect turned the mistake into an opportunity.

"In retrospect, 20 feet was a good limit for the place," Barrett said.

The jury of two architects and one artist apparently agreed, finding the home's use of space part of its allure.

"This is an extremely well-crafted house which shows a consistency of concept and detail throughout," the jury said. "It has a wonderful sense of scale and livability... and we can all project ourselves into how each room will be lived in."

Among the 18 projects submitted for the biennial awards, each was scrutinized by individual jurors combing through photographs, floor plans, written descriptions and other information before picking the winners.

The jurors did not visit any of the sites since several of the projects were built outside the area — one as far away as Honduras — while others were never built at all.

In fact, in addition to the residential and commercial design categories, the AIA design awards program includes a special category specifically for unbuilt projects.

"It provides an opportunity for architects who have spent a good deal of effort on projects that for one reason or another were never implemented," Korcheck explained.

The jury chose Barrett's house for the Honor Award, the Samson Student Center at the Monterey Institute of International Studies (designed by JHW Architects of Monterey) for the Merit Award for overall design, and four firms for the Citation Awards, which applaud a particular design characteristic, such as good use of site planning or inventive use of materials. Those recipients included Flesher and Foster Architects for a Del Monte Beach home, Eric Miller Architects for the unbuilt Monterey Peninsula College stadium, Dennis Hodgkin Architects and HGHB Architects for the Laguna Seca Office Condominiums, and JHW Architects for the remodel and addition at the Monterey Senior Center.

Also a winner of the Honor Award in 1984 for a cottage he designed on Eighth Avenue in Carmel, Barrett said he was grateful the jury recognized the care he took in the year-plus process of designing the Huntleys' home.

"Architecture is more than keeping the rain off someone's head or trying to project impressions that are merely superficial," he commented. "Good architecture nourishes the spirit of all who come in contact with it."

Carmel architect Richard Barrett designed this Carmel Valley home reminiscent of a turn-of-the-century English country residence. It caught the eye of an American Institute of Architects Monterey Bay jury and won him top honors.

New withholding requirement hits second homes

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A LITTLE-NOTICED provision of a state budget bill passed last fall is hitting the sellers of second homes, who are seeing 3.3 percent of the sale price of their homes withheld at the close of escrow and sent to Sacramento.

Effective Jan. 1, the bill requires escrow companies to withhold the amount from the sale of second homes — regardless of whether the seller will owe taxes on the sale.

"Unless it's your principal residence, the 3.3 percent comes right off the top," said

Dave Ziel of Old Republic Title in Carmel. "If you're a corporation or a partnership you're not affected, but if you're a human, you are."

The 3.3 percent — which can be a very large amount in the state's pricey second-home markets — is credited just like a quarterly tax payment to the seller's tax account and is reconciled when he files his tax return. In effect, the state is using sellers' money as an interest-free loan.

According to Forbes Magazine, the withholding will hit 300,000 sellers and produce $225 million in temporary revenue for the state this year.

Dear patrons,

As you all know, the last two years away from the Sunset Theater have been very challenging for all of us, musicians, volunteers, and patrons alike. But we managed to meet this challenge successfully because of your continued support and generosity and that of our temporary hosts at Santa Catalina, the Naval Postgraduate School, All Saints Church, the Carmel Mission, Asilomar, Pacific Repertory Theater, and Church in the Forest. What a lot of places it took to replace Sunset Theater!

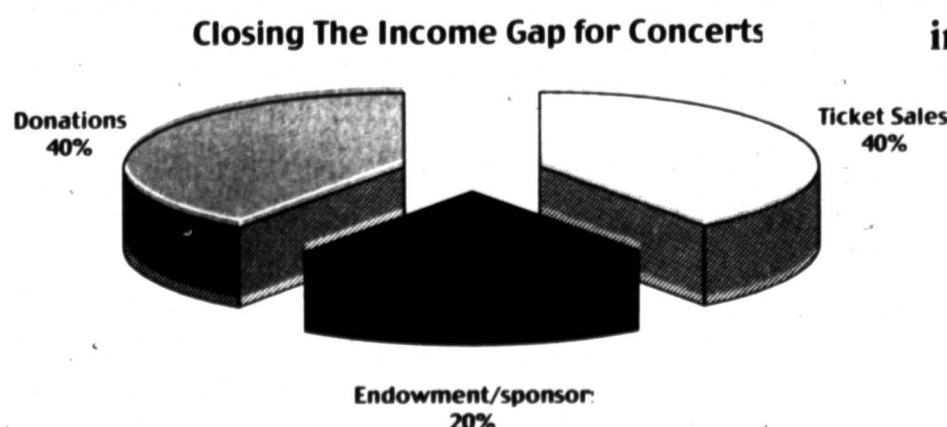

This summer we'll finally be home again, and we plan to do our utmost to express our appreciation to all of you by means of your reseating at Sunset Theater. When we assign seats in response to your ticket order, we will take into careful consideration all the ways in which you have supported us — your attendance record, your financial support, your hours of volunteering for us, etc., etc.. The first year in a "new" venue is always a bit experimental. I am sure that, together, we will find the best possible way to truly enjoy the new situation!

Make sure you place your ticket order before April 1. And another important message to you, dear patrons: Please remind yourself that the price of a ticket, expensive though it sometimes seems, covers only half of what it actually costs to make that performance available. That's why we have to add this line at the bottom of the order form: With your generosity — in addition to your ticket order — you enable us to continue to serve you in the best possible way by producing great concerts . . . for you!!

I so much look forward to meeting and greeting you all at our great Sunset reunion this coming summer.

— Willem Wijnbergen
Managing Director
